Administrative History or Biographical Sketch

"The Rambler" was one John Harry Shannon (1869-1928). Shannon, born in Baltimore, Maryland on April 3, 1869, was a reporter for the Washington Evening Star from 1890-1895, and later became a member of the newspaper's editorial staff beginning in 1900 until his death on February 12, 1928.

As early as 1905, Shannon wrote articles about historic sites for the Evening Star although these published editorials did not include his name. Beginning in 1912, Shannon launched "The Rambler" column, a series of weekly historical articles which reported in a conversational style on old churches, houses, battlefields, and roads in Virginia, Maryland, and the District. To write these columns, Shannon travelled the region on foot or on horseback lugging along with him his camera, tripod, and supply of glass plates. He would take snapshots of the scenes he visited and use them to illustrate his articles. The column, which gained a following of thousands of readers, ran regularly until Shannon fell ill in 1922. After a two-year lapse, he resumed "The Rambler" in 1924, however Shannon's ailments forced him to restrict his coverage to just the District. "The Rambler" continued until poor health forced his last column on December 11, 1928. Shannon died two months later.

After Shannon's death, his collection of approximately 2,500 negatives came into the possession of the Columbia Historical Society, forerunner of the Historical Society of Washington D.C. In the 1960s, the society planned to sell off many of the collection's non-Washington D.C. negatives. Josephine Cobb, a manager for the National Archives

Still Photograph Branch and a member of the Fairfax Historical Landmarks Preservation Commission had been working with photos at the Columbia Historical Society. She informed fellow Landmarks Preservation Commission member Mayo Stuntz of the society's wish to sell off the collection. In 1967, Mayo and Connie Stuntz purchased 500 of The Rambler's 5x7 dry plate negatives from the Columbia Historical Society for one dollar a negative.

The society delivered the negatives to the Stuntzes contained in their original manila envelopes each identified and inscribed in J. Harry Shannon's handwriting. Although Shannon first published "The Rambler" in 1912, many of the Stuntz negatives were taken between 1900 and 1912, and some in the collection had never appeared in the newspaper. As it turns out, Stuntz's collection does not include all of The Rambler's Virginia plate negatives. Some remain in the possession of the Historical Society of Washington D.C.

In 1998, Mayo and Connie Stuntz published negatives from their Rambler collection in "This Was Virginia 1900-1927: As Shown by the Glass Negatives of J. Harry Shannon, The Rambler". On December 10, 1998, they donated the collection of negatives to Fairfax County Public Library's Virginia Room.

In 2001, the Virginia Room contracted with Chicago Albumen Works to reproduce, conserve, and repair the original negatives. The Friends of the George Mason Library fully funded the project. The original 485 glass plate negatives are preserved in safe storage at the Fairfax County Archives. Duplicate negatives and reference prints are available for viewing in the Virginia Room.

Scope and Content

The Stuntz Collection of Rambler Photographs consists of 485 print photographs dating from 1900-1922 and taken in Virginia by J. Harry Shannon for "The Rambler" column which ran in the Washington Evening Star newspaper from 1912 to 1928. The prints were made from the original negatives which are stored off-site. Descriptions of each image are in J. Harry Shannon's own words, and the negatives are arranged numerically according to Shannon's numbering system. The subjects vary from the famous to the mundane, including old houses, cemeteries, roads, public buildings, and battlefields. Counties and cities in Virginia include Alexandria, Appomattox, Arlington, Caroline, Fairfax, Fredericksburg, Harrisonburg, Loudoun, Prince William, Spotsylvania, Stafford, Warren, Westmoreland, York, and Jefferson County, WV.
